

INTRODUCTION.

ANDMARKS in my history are the two great International Expositions held on American soil. My career began at the one; its success was gloriously illustrated at the other. A curiosity at the Centennial; a necessary adjunct to the success of the Columbian. The pen did the writing of the Philadelphia management; it was used only for signatures in the White City. The prophecies made from my cradle at the Centennial were fulfilled under every roof in Jackson Park. (See page 40.)

That particular demonstration of Remington supremacy is a thing of the past. The World's Fair is gone, but the city that made it remains, and with it an enduring and ever-increasing exhibit of my pre-eminence. The great and busy city of Chicago teems with my word-builders. Others there are, too, and in great variety, existing upon one pretence or another; but the extent to which they have collectively prevailed is indicated by the present equipment of the famous office buildings and leading mercantile houses. Step with me into these, and it will be observed that, notwithstanding years of competition, the progressive policy of the Pioneer has rendered its position practically impregnable.
